The Longman Photo Dictionary is a vocabulary and conversation practice book for learners of English, which presents more than 2,000 vocabulary items in over 80 different semantic categories. The colour photographs introduce a wide range of topics, and are used to present groups of words which are linked either contextually (The Dining Room) or thematically (Emotions).

The Longman Photo Dictionary may also be used for alphabetizing, guessing games, listening practice, dictation, storytelling, categorizing, writing practice, compositions, debates, discussions, pair or group work. Indeed, the four skills of listening, speaking, reading and writing may be stimulated by each unit and may vary greatly depending on the language level and needs of your students.

The units are self-contained and are not presented in a developmental order. We encourage you to introduce the units in a way which suits your teaching situation best. You may, for example, want to group Numbers with Money and Banking, or present the rooms of the house with Action at Home.

Each unit contains a sample exercise which is designed to stimulate conversation and guide the students in describing the scenes or in using the vocabulary to communicate about their own lives and opinions. Some of the functions in the exercises involve describing relationships and details, making comparisons, naming, labelling and communicating opinions and preferences. The particular structure selected for each exercise is intrinsically related to its generalized use in the context of the photographs and vocabulary in each unit. For example, the unit Fast Foods and Snacks uses the structure “Do you like hot dogs?”, and asks the students to express their preferences.

Some of the conventions used in the exercises are as follows: a slash mark as in “Yes, I do./No, I don’t.” indicates that students have an alternative and should give their opinions. The dots . . . indicate that students should create their own statements or questions and answers based on the model given.

We have intended to provide a basic resource of language and culture to be used on various levels as either a main or supplementary text. It is our hope that the photographs will excite you and your students and move you to discuss each topic at hand. We welcome you to share your ideas with us.
